Sea Raids By Israel Hit 3 Ports In Lebanon

TEL AVIV, July 8 (UPI) -- Is-mel reported tonight that its mmandos sank 20 bosts in three Lebanese harbors this evening inmids designed to forestall strikes my Arab guerrillas and warn them: that the sea-lanes to Israel are as closed as the land routes. Military sources here said that the brief, after-dark attacks were launched because the Israelis had learned of Arab preparations for a scaborne guerrilla assault into Israel such as the one at Nahanya on June 24. The Israeli sources said that naval gunboats took the commandos to the three harbors, in each of which they blew up 10 motorboats with planted explosives. A sources said that there were no Lebanese or guerrilla casualties. The military command said that Israel suffered no casualties.

A Lebanese military communi-que said that 21 fishing boats were sunk by Israell fire and one person was slightly wounded when a time-bomb exploded at Sidon

Lebanese coastal gunners coen ed fire at the attacking Israeli naval units, "which were seen retreating," the Lebanese communique said.

The Israeli command said that its raiders struck Tyre, Ras-el-Shak and Sidon, three of the biggest Lebanese ports. Sidon is 30 miles north of the Israeli irontier.

The attacks represented Israel's first naval operation against the Lebanese coast since May 10, when gunboats struck what Israel described as a guerrilla base at Rashadiyeh.

"It was a lightning operation," ?. Tel Aviv source said of tonight's foray. "Because we saw that preparations were under way for en assault, it was a warning flist the sea route to Israel also is inst-open If they think the sea route is open, we showed them that it isn't and that they had better

Deficit-Laden Liner France Will Be Retired in Autumn

PARIS, July 8 (AP).—The French Line announced today that the liner France will be taken out of service before the end of the year because the government is Political and Military Crisis withdrawing the subsidy needed to cover operating expenses.

Before the death of President

Georges Pompidou on April 2, the government's transport sec-retary said that it had been decided to retire the 22-year-old vessel the world's largest passenger liner, because of its operating deficit. But the plan was not mentioned in the electoral campaign that followed Mr. Pompidou's death, nor was it discussed publicly by the regime of President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing. As finance minister in the Pompidou regime, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was known to feel that the luxury vessel's deficit-projected to reach $24 million this year-was prohibitive. Maritime unions said that they would call a general strike covering all French-flag vessels if the France were taken out of service.

.During his election campaign, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing seemed to encourage hopes that the 66,000ton France might be continued in service, sending French Line workers telegrams that reportedly extolled the ship as a fine "ambassador" for France [Reuters reported that after the

Tanaka Party Keeps Power

By Fox Butterfield

TOKYO, Tuesday, July 9 (NYT). - Japan's governing Liberal Democratic party appeared to have kept its control of the uphouse of parliament in Sunday's election, still-incomplete returns showed today. But the majority will be reduced from the eight votes the Liberal Democrats

With 36 million out of about 50 million ballots counted, the Liberal Democrats, a conservative group, had won 57 of the 130 seats at stake, against 56 for the four opposition parties. Liberal Democrats need 63 seats to reach a majority in the half of the upper house that was up for election this year.

Although the opposition parties failed once again to end the Liberal Democrats' quarter-century dominance over both houses of parliament, the mixed results fell short of the clear mandate hoped for by Premier Kakuei Tanaka.

Celebrity Candidates

He has staked his sagging prestige on the election, campaigning energetically and direct-ing the party's strenuous effort to enroll celebrity candidates and raise millions of dollars from major corporations.

The outcome of the election, informed party leaders said, will increase dissatisfaction with Mr. Tanaka's often heavy-handed leadership and may lead to an early cabinet reshuffle. However, Mr. Tanaka will remain as Premier at least until the party presidential election scheduled next summer.

Speaking at party headquarters yesterday afternoon, Mr. Tanaka said that "our party has been strongly supported by the voters" although he admitted that the party had won "fewer seats than I expected."

Among the opposition, both the often-divided Socialists and the well-organized Communists scored gains. The Socialists won 26 (Continued on Page 2, Col. 5)

Powers of Presidency Argued at High Court

In Watergate Drama

By Robert Siner

WASHINGTON. July 8 (THT). -In a historic confrontation before the Supreme Court today, the Watergate special prosecutor warned that constitutional government "is in serious jeopardy" if the President is allowed to dely the judiciary, and President Nixon's counsel contended that, by taking up the case, the court would become improperly involved in the impeachment process.

A prosecution lawyer also argued that Mr. Nixon could not claim executive privilege because there was sufficient evidence to suggest that the President was part of a "criminal conspiracy . to obstruct justice."

The high court has been asked to decide whether President Nixon is empowered by the Constitution to withhold evidence from the Watergate trials on the grounds of executive privilege, dispite an order by U.S. District Judge John Sirica that the tapes of 64 presidential conversations be surrendered to him.

The Supreme Court will aiso decide a related question brought by the White House-whether a grand jury had the constitutional authority to name the President as an unindicted co-conspirator in the Watergate cover-up.

No Longer Equal' Special prosecutor Leon Jaworski, beginning the oral presentations today, contended that, if the President and not the court is the final judge of what the Constitution means, "then Americans are no longer equal under the law." Mr. Jaworski said of Mr. Nixon's stand:

"He may be right in how he reads the Constitution. He may be wrong. If he is wrong who is to tell him so? What, then, becomes of our constitutional form of government?"

The White House's chief Watergate attorney. James St. Clair, argued that the high court should dismiss the special prosecutor's case because even to take it up would involve the court in impeachment proceedings against "Only the legislature has the right to conduct an impeachment," Mr. St. Clair declared. The special prosecutor is drawing this court into those proceedings inevitably and inexorably." As both men argued, before an eight-justice bench in a jammed courtroom, on the largely uncharted area of presidential power and executive privilege, their presentations were interrupted by questions from the justices on various points.

Douglas's Query

Mr. Jaworski was only minutes into his oral argument when he was asked by Justice William Douglas what the grand jury's naming of the President as an unindicted co-conspirator in the Watergate cover-up had to do with the subpoena for tapes of presidential conversations.

The special prosecutor replied that the federal grand jury action had been made known in the course of his arguments before Judge Sirica, arguments in which he sought a subpoena for the tapes. He explained that the material was used in order to give the judge a full picture of the Watergate conspiracy. Justice Potter Stewart questioned Mr. St. Clair on his argument concerning the court's possible involvement in impeachment proceedings. Does this mean that the high court should be "stopped dead in its tracks" because impeachment is under way, he asked.

The presidential attorney answered that it did not, but he again said that impeachment is solely the province of the legislative branch. Justice Thurgood Marshall raised a ripple of laughter by remarking to Mr. St. Clair that, if the court dismissed the case on grounds that it should not have been taken up, Judge Siricas order for surrender of the tapes would remain in force. The President's attorney replied that nevertheless "it should be dismissed, period."

The Supreme Court bench numbered only eight jurists today because the ninth, Justice William Rehnquist, who was once an assistant attorney general under (Continued on Page 2, Col. 8)

In Ellsberg Case

Kissinger Is Ordered To Testify at Trial

WASHINGTON, July 8 (UPI).—U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell today ordered Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to appear as a defense witness in the Ellsberg break-in trial. Judge Gesell acted after one of the defendants, John Ehrlichman, testifying in his own behalf, denied that he ordered the burglary in 1971 while serving as President Nixon's adviser on domestic policy. Mr. Ehrlichman said he never realized the "covert operation" that he approved would lead to the break-in.

Judge Gesell ordered Mr. Kissinger to appear Wednesday. Mr. Ehrlichman's lawyers said that it was "material and necessary" that the secretary of state testify.

William Frates, one of Mr. Ehrlichman's lawyers, said he wanted Mr. Kissinger to respond to testimony by David Young that Mr. Ehrlichman and Mr. Kissinger directed that the White House "plumbers" investigative unit get a psychological profile of Daniel Ellsberg after he had leaked the Pentagon papers to newsmen. Young is a former assistant to Mr. Kissinger and Mr.

Mr. Kissinger sought last week to get his subpoens quashed but Judge Gesell ruled against him and ordered that he stand "in readiness" to respond if called.

Mr. Ehrlichman testified today that Mr. Nixon relieved him of supervisory control over the "plumbers" two months before they broke into the office of Mr. Ellsberg's psychiatrist in September, 1971. Mr. Ehrlichman and three members of the "plumbers"-

Gordon Liddy, Bernard Barker and Eugenio Martiner - are accused of conspiracy to violate the civil rights of Dr. Lewis Fielding, the psychiatrist whose Beverly Hills, Calif., office was hurrlarized.

Mr. Ehrlichman is also charged with perjury in previous testimony about the case. Mr. Ehrlichman said that Egil Krogh co-directol of the "plumbers" with Young, accepted full responsibility for the break-in during a conversation that they had after the burglary. The key questions posed to Mr. Enrichman by another of his defense lawyers, Henry Jones, were:

Q-"Did you authorize the break-in of Dr. Fielding's office?"

Q-"Did you see the blueprint for the break-in?" A_"I've never seen that."

Q-"Did Mr. Krogh ever tell you about the break-in prior to its happening?" Q_'Did he ever take full responsibility himself?"

A_"Yes sir."

Prosecutor William Merrill cross-examined Mr. Ehrlichman about an Aug. 11, 1971, memorandum in which Krogh and Young proposed a "covert operation" to obtain Mr. Eilsberg's psychia-

Mr. Ehrlichman acknowledged that he had approved the memorandum with his initial "E," and the message: "If done under your assurance it is not traceable."

You realize this means you gave your written approval to what's in the memo?" Mr. Merrill asked.

"Yes," Mr. Erblichman said, but he added that he did not contemplate that the covert operation would involve burglary.

BONN, July 8 (Reuters).-West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Prench President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing met today in the first semiannual Franco-German summit meeting they have attended as government leaders. Economic and political problems of the European Economic Community figured to dominate their two days of talks at Gymnich Castle near here.

A Boun government spokesman said after today's initial session that Mr. Schmidt had told Mr. Giscard d'Estaing that West Germany will probably soon close a legal loophole that has allowed those responsible for war crimes in occupied France to escape

At issue is the West German parliament's failure to ratify a treaty amendment which the countries signed in 1971. Its aim was to allow war criminals to be retried in Germany even after they had been tried in absentia, by French authorities. Mr. Schmidt told the French President "that ratification should be possible by the end of the year, the spokesman said.

U.S. Ordered To Repay '71 Import Levy

Customs Court Voids Nixon's Surcharges

By Philip Green

NEW YORK, July 8 (WP).— The U.S. Customs Court today struck down a temporary import surcharge imposed in 1971 and ordered the government to repay about $500 million it had collected. In a unanimous decision, the three-judge court ruled that Prestutional authority when he imposed the surcharge as part of a package of anti-inflationary measures on Aug. 16, 1971. The surcharge was discontinued four months later

Lawyers for the government said the ruling will be appealed to the Court of Customs and Patents Appeals in Washington. It could then be appealed to the Supreme Court.

The ruling was made on a suit by Yoshida International, Inc., of Lindburst, N.J., now called YKK Zipper (U.S.A.) Inc. The company paid the added duty on shipments from its parent com-pany in Japan on Aug. 17, 25 and 26, 1971.

Now, according to reliable scurces, about 55 per cent of the marijuana entering the United States goes from Jamaica to Florida by boat or plane and is being distributed throughout the East by organized crime.

Despite pressure from Washington, however, the Jamaican government of Prime Minister Michael Manley did little to combat the marijuana traffic until it became apparent that hard drugs and even gunrunning had become involved.

South American Sources

The traffic in drugs other than narijuana has consisted mainly of cocaine that arrived here on commercial flights from South An erica and was then transferred light aircraft and boats for smuggling into the United States. The gunrunning helped provoke the crackdown on drugs because some imported firearms being bartered for marijuana and several murders of prominent Jamaicans reportedly were linked by the police to the drug business.

A new Ministry of National Security and Justice was formed and a businessman, Eli Matalon, was put in charge of the police and military forces. The government also created a controversial Gun Court, giving it the authority to try within a week anyone found with a firearm and the power to sentence the guilty to "indel-

MOSCOW, July 8 (Reuters) .-The government newspaper lavestla said yesterday that the West German decision to set up a federal environment protection office in West Berlin was "a gross con tradiction of the letter and spirit of the four-power agreement" on the city. Russia maintains that West Berlin is an entity separate from the Federal Republic

Izvestia commentator Grigori Sidorov said the Bundestag's June 19 ratification of the decisior was due to pressure from the parliamentary opposition and from the West Berlin Senate. In what looked like a veiled threat to withdraw concessions made under the 1972 agreement. Mr. Sidorov said that those behind the decision were doing "a disservice to the West Berlin population, to whom this agreement brought so many real and tangible advantages."

Arab 'Envoy' on Tour of U.S. Found Signs of New Respect

CAIRO, July 8 (NYT).-An envoy of the Arab League who has been exploring American attitudes toward the Arab world returned from New York to Cairo last week with word that the natives over there are friendly -up to a point.

Clovis Maksoud, a leading Lebanese journalist, visited 54 cities in 32 states during the last five months. He reported to the league that he had found Americans more interested in the Middle East than in the past, and more willing to see the Arab side of the conflict.

But in a report to the league's secretary-general, Mahmoud Riad Mr. Maksoud cautioned that the changes in American attitudes were limited and tentative.

In an interview, Mr. Maksoud elaborated: "The bias for Israel has been reduced but not removed; we have no real support,

The plan was disclosed in advertisements in the Israeli press calling for reservists and poidiers on active duty to volunteer for the force. Newsmen traced the ads to a reserve lieutenant, a veteran of all Israel's wars and a British Army soldier in World War II.

Authorities refused to permit newsmen to identify the man beyond his first name and mitial—"Etan H." The man told newsmen he had "received tens of answers" to the ad for the force that he said would be based in "Fatablend" to fight "continuously and systematically."

Mr. Maksoud, who took leave from An Nahar, the Beirut daily newspaper, to go on the speakingand-listening assignment, warned the Arabs to beware of the trap premature euphoria" about the U.S. role in the Middle East.

The October war and the oil embargo have stimulated a new curiosity about the Arabs among Americans, Mr. Maksoud said. "We have won a great deal of respect that we didn't have before," he added.

But Americans, he said, seem to think that the main job was completed with the troop disengagement in Syria and along the Suez Canal. "They don't realize that this is only the beginning and that American mediation, in order to be success ful, must help bring about a full Israeli withdrawal and make it possible for the Palestinians to create their own state."

Mr. Maksoud, who had visited the United States many times before, spoke to university students, businessmen, politicians, labor leaders and civic clubs. He said that with a few exceptions he was asked no hostile questions -- only questions for informa-

As for Congress, Mr. Maksoud said that he was convinced that a growing number of senators and representatives would take a critical look at new requests for assistance to Israel. They will continue to sign, but there will be fewer congressmen who will sign blindly and automatically." he said.

He said that he had told a group of senators: "We don't expect you to refuse to sign those bills for Israel-but at least hesitate before you sign.

Mr. Maksoud said that one of the most encouraging new developments he encountered in the United States was that "Americans of Arab origin have lost their inferiority complex."

He added: "Their civic clubs are active. They have discovered that ethnic politics are respectable even for them. Arab-Americans are standing for local office and other Arab-Americans are campaigning and voting for them."

General Says Israel Needs Newer Jets

To Counter MiG-23s Delivered to Syria TEL AVIV, July 8 (AP).-Israel

needs newer American fighter planes to counter the Sovietmade MiG-23s now in the Syrian Air Force, the head of the Israeli Air Force said yesterday. Maj. Gen. Binyamin Peled said Syria is the only country other than the Soviet Union that has the swing-wing fighter. Units of the Soviet Air Force fly the MiG-23 for countries in Esstern Europe, he said. "I wouldn't state that we have begun to be interior just because [MiG-23s] have arrived, Gen. Peled said at a news conference on Israel's Air Force Day. "We still think the gap of aircraft plus pilot is sufficient to counter this threat-but we want more." He said the Grumman F-14 Tomcat, the McDonnell-Douglas F-15 Eagle, the General Dynamics YF-16 and the Northrop YF-17 "are the only streraft in the Western world" that can match the MiG-23's performance.

Quick Delivery

Israel, he said, could get delivery in a day of the F-14, which is deployed with the U.S. Navy, if the United States wished to sell them from stock. He estimated, however, that it would take "a few months to acquire them in normal procedures."

The newer F-15 has only recently been put into production and the others have been flown but are not in service, he said. Gen. Peled discussed for the first time the U.S.-made Chaparral anti-sircraft missile system now used by the Israelis. He said the heat-seeking missile made its first "kill" anywhere by downing a Syrian MiG-17 over the Golan Heights early this year. An advantage of the Chaparral is its ability to hide from enemy alteraft by not emitting elec-tronic signals, he said, but he admitted that it is possible fo counter the system. He indicated that the short-range surface-toair missile serves Israel's purposes well because the cost of equipping all Arab aircraft with countering devices would be extremely high.

Gen. Peled said the rate of loss of Israeli aircraft to Arab missiles in the October war was low-er than generally is believed. amounting to about half of all planes lost. He said no Israeli pilot refused to fly during the war, despite the effectiveness of the Arab missiles.

WASHINGTON, July 8 (UPI),
—Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash,
today called for full diplomatic recognition of China and withdrawal of the U.S. Embassy from Taiwan.

Sen Jackson, who returned Saturday from a weeklong trip to China, said in a statement that the United States "should try to reverse the location of our embassy and liaison office as be-tween Taipei and Peking." The United States maintains a linison office in Peking, but no embassy.

Sen, Jackson also urged that each country exchange correspondents and establish more substantial programs of cultural and educational exchanges.

He said that Chinese leaders he talked to were wary to Soviet policy, which they think is sim-ed at China, and "they are conrned about the weakness of Europe and the need for greater unity among the Western allies."

No postman has ever been known to say: "You want slacks?"

Now there's some talk that manufacturers have been shrinking the pattern before the garment is cut-to save fabric-so that a Size 14 is more like a Size 12 1 2. Last winter things got so bad that the bootmakers shrunk the pattern; everything in the stores was in the spindle-shank

But trying to compensate for the shrunken pattern in the bathing suit department is futile-the marker appears to have been thrown away one steamy afterboon in 1964. Since then, manufacturers have evidently been cutting bathing suits from the scraus left over from the year before. with fragments from bandanas thrown in. A scrap of this, a snip-pit of that and presto—a $29.95 bathing suit suitable for wear in

To find a suit, one must go into the store because of those little notices saying nothing is returnable. Eventually, there is no hiding from it. Well, I did hide for a couple of years. I had the good fortune to visit an underdeveloped country, a place where women made of more than skin and bones are considered to be normal or possibly even advantageous.

I was unceremoniously presented with a greenish garment into which I could slide in comfort and ease. My arms and legs and head stuck out at correct angles and I could bend over. When I entered the water, I was able to manipulate my limbs in a way that propelled me forward without causing the garment to pop off.

Called 'Swimming'

In that underdeveloped area. this was called swimming and I found it truly diverting, perhaps even more enjoyable than sitting on one of those floating chairs in the water while holding a drink, or better than pushing expensively dressed people into the pool.

I so enjoyed the experience that I asked the proprietor if I could buy the greenish garment. After some discussion about why I didn't go into a store and buy one just like it 'I've been that route, and no thanks. I bought the sopping thing, dried it and ultimately imported it into the United States. For a couple of vegrs I've been able to go to the beach feeling like a member of

But now, oh woe, the greenish carment is worn out. I besought the advice of my chic friend. She had done her usual thing of wrapping herself in two yards of batik and a camelan orchestra and the mere sight of her made my hem out and one heel break off one of my shoes.

"Don't be stily," she said aurily. You're the athletic type and you should wear a leotard." Me in a leotard. Well. Have you ever seen the Michelin tire man?

I tried on a "dressmaker" suit, made by an uphoisterer from miles of fabric. It looked as if it would be like swimming in a downed parachute I thought of cut-off blue jeans and a T-shirt. like the kids, but I lear I would dare swim only at observer and deserted beaches, Nudism leaves

What is really needed are some bathing suits with enough material in them of a relatively plain sort. Even my sveltest friends emplain that they can't cover their flanks with what's offered unless they remain standing bolt unright at all times. I think the manufacturers might be delighted with the closet swimmers that emerged if they set out something to wear.

But at this point my psyche is so cheesy that I'm planning to spend the weekend in transcendental meditation. My mantra is

U.S., Russia Sign a Major Art Exchange

By Peter Osnos

MOSCOW (WP).—The Soviet Union and the Metropohtan Museum of Art in New York completed negotiations Saturday for the first in a series of major exchanges that involve art treasures never before seen outside

The show, to open in New York April, 1975, will include the Scythian collection from the Hermitage Museum in Leningrad and other ancient masterpieces of sculptured gold and bronze. In return, the Metropolium will send 100 of its best European and American paintings to the Soviet

"Nothing like this collection has ever been mounted or seen in the United States," said Thomas Hoving jr., director of the Metropolitan. He said the exhibition would unquestionably rank among the most important ever presented in the more than 100-year history of the museum.

The exchange was formally noted last week in the joint communique issued at the end of the summit talks between President Nixon and Soviet leader Leonid Brechney Hoving said the arrangement is the first official exchange of Soviet and U.S.-owned masternieces

After 10 weeks in New York. Hoving said, the show will 20 to Los Angeles for six weeks. Under a protocol to be signed by the Soviet Ministry of Culture and the Metropolitan, no other cities will be included. Only Moscow and Leningrad will get the Metro-pre-Columbian days, Bretons and a sense, a by-product of the New England fisheries, for it was to Portuguese, probably. But nobody gave the secret away until ed the cod of Newfoundland and told the whole world about it. Prench, Portuguese, Spanish and English lishing boots immediately occupied the Grand Banks. Plymouth was founded in 1620, Gloucester in 1623; a first attempt to establish a fishing industry there falled, for the Pilgrims were not skillful fishermen. But m . 1628 they tried again, this time successfully. At the same time. the Rev. Hugh Peter, who had emigrated from his native fishing village in Cornwall, established a second fishing base at Marblesd and quickly developed a market for dried cod.

These first New England fishermen need not have gone as just southeast of the coast of Massachusetts lies Georges Bank, larger than the state itself, which before the Ice Ages had been a wooded island. Under the weight of the ice which covered it during the glacks period, it sank beneath the surface to become an underwater plateau swarming with cod and other fish. The Pilgrims may have neglected it because constaint logs and treacherous currents make its waters dangerous; but it seems likelier that they had not yet detected its richness in fish, although they knew there were cod about, if only from the name an English navigator had given to Cape Cod in 1602. In any case, the wealth of the Newfoundland banks was a known factor so it was in this direction that the New Englanders turned their attention. By 1640, New England was already doing so well in the fishing business that in that year alone it sent 800,000 dried codfish to market.

London Not Amused

The success of the colonies in developing this and other industries did not particularly please the government of London, which take them long to realize that in 1851 beyond the first of the Acts of Trade and Navigation, the general idea of which was no commerce except through the mother country, which collect the profits although it was not until the reign of William and Mary, which started in 1689, that these laws were strictly enforced.

But eventually, London was obliged to recognize that cod had become the main industry of the Massachusetts Bay Colony and that it should be allowed to develop unless the Crown wanted e bankrant colony to support Since the end of the 17th cantury, Massachusetts had been shipping dried fish to England m greater quantities than it could shootb and Britain could not spere the shipping to re-export it. So, an exception was made to the Trade and Navigation Acts permitting New England to export its cod directly to any buyer in its own ships and to bring back cargoes from the ports where they landed it. The best market was the West Indies; figures which have been preserved since 1763 show that one of the biggest customers was the Dutch colony of Surinam talmost a case of carrying coals to Newcastle, since the Dutch had themselves been such active dealers in cod since the 14th century that they had given to the Latin languages their word for fresh cod-in French. cabilland, in Dutch, kabeljaum) Yankee ships, already faster than British craft, also pushed on to South America and even into the Mediterranean, bringing back

Once again, this was too much success and the cod became a cause of the American Revolution. Historian Daniel Boorstin wrote:

In 1775, to punish Massachusetts, London enacted the New England Restraining Act, which forbade Americans to fish off Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. This could have been a casus belli all by itself, but by this time the colonies no longer needed another one. The Restraining Act was passed in March, but before the news reached America the battles of Lexington and Concord had already been fought by patriots whose gathering place had been Faneuil Hall, provided by Peter Fancuil, whose fortune had been made in cod. When the fighting ended John Adams. who was not a Massachusetts man for nothing, informed the British at the 1793 peace negotiations that it was a case of "fisheries or no peace." He secured by the peace treaty not only the right for American fishermen to operate in the waters of British America, but even to land in Newfoundland to dry their Grand Banks catches before carrying them away.

Nevertheless, New England fishcries suffered a blow in the Revolution from which they never fully recovered. Because fishing schooners had been converted into fighting ships, the fishing fleet after the war was only onefourth to one-lifth of its prerevolutionary size. The little lishing town of Chatham (whose fish pier still boasts a weathervane in the shape of a cod) had 27 cod fishing vessels in 1774, but only four or five when the fighting ended. However, the taking, preserving and marketing of cod remained important snough for New England to create the "codfish aristoccaey," made up of wealthy citizens who had mad their money from the cod. Wallace Irwin put it:

In ocean's deep autocracy. There's none possess haughtines As the coddish aristocracy. The Cabots themselves were codfish aristocrats.

New England cod fishing was by now playing an important role in another flourishing industry, the slave trade. In Africa slaves were bought with Spanish coins, rum, or salt cod, In the West Indies, plantation owners fed their slaves chiefly on cod supplied from New England-the best fish went to the Mediterranean lands, a region of cod connoisseurs; the second best to other overseas customers, and the rest to the slave plantations.

Whatever happened to leadership, and where are the leaders?

The decline of leadership around the world is acknowledged by most nations. Its scarcity is felt in many areas of political responsibility: its absence is recognized in fields and in countries that formerly generated leaders. It is a subject of global concern.

This week's issue of TIME is a positive approach to a present dilemma and, quite possibly an antidote to cynicism or dismay. In an unusual undertaking, the editors of TIME are devoting this week's issue almost exclusively to an exploration of the leadership crisis—and the compilation of those personalities who seem likely to become the world's new leaders.

In TIMEs cover story you will find a study of leadership itself...its requisites, its effect, its problems. The real problems. suggests TIME have become essentially global, rather than national. Worldwide inflation, the specters of famine and nuclear war, overpopulation, the industrial corruption of nature, all of these together with civil wars and racial conflict, terrorism and repression.

In this one issue TIME has put together a comprehensive survey of power and its employment-including thoughtful essays on leaders past, women as leaders, and leadership in dictatorships.

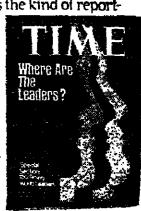

TIME also examines the led, noting that strong leaders have always depended upon a certain unity of followers, a sense of common purpose and direction.

These days, say the editors, there seem to be no clear majorities. "In an age of widespread skepticism and public awareness, with a diversity of often contradictory interests and problems defiant of solutions, states TIME, people tend increasingly to watch and pass judgment, not to follow.

And in a special section the editors have compiled a list of 150 young men and women with the characteristics of leadership...a biographical album of those persons 45 or younger who should make a significant political impact on the world's future. This is the kind of report-that should encourage an international dialogue. It is also the kind of editorial initiative that causes more people in more countries to get their news from TIME each week than from any other single source. 26 million readers.

Everybody's to Blame

chairman of President Nixon's Council of Economic Advisers, made a somewhat less than profound comment on inflation. The public, he said, is responsible for inflation "in a basic sense," because Americans are "so reluctant to have a tax increase they created the conditions."

"In a basic sense," this is, of course, true. Everybody (except those whose incomes or profits are geared to fixed rates) really prefers inflation to the measures that may be necessary to check it; an inflated paycheck is exhilarating, even if most of it is dissipated in paying inflated bills. And of all bills, tax bills give the least satisfaction in paying-it is hard to relate them to the services they provide.

But, accepting that truism, what is to be done about the global inflation and the disruptions of international exchange of goods and services it entails? For inflation, even that which stems—as in most industrialized countries-from growth in national production, is an evil that is now presenting its

Yet governments and economists alike are floundering in their attempts to cope with this dismal aspect of the dismal science. Inflation has been a major issue in every recent election campaign - in Britain, France. Japan and Canada. It has been blamed on the big corporations and the big unions, on the oil producers and the oil distributors, on the manufacturing countries

Speaking on television, Herbert Stein, and those which mine or till the soil. Yet, apart from grim statistics and much rhetoric, little has emerged that bears upon the

> In a completely self-sufficient nation. there is no special reason why prices and incomes should not rise ad infinitem. Inequities would, to be sure, occur in the process. but the same would be true of deflation or economic stability. What brings the disasters of inflation is the fact that no nation is really self-sufficient, that it must buy and sell to other countries, where the rates at which one buys and sells are probably dilterent, and where inflation can mean severely adverse balances of trade. Both Italy and Britain are striking examples of this painful truth, but it is evident in nearly every country - including the Communist countries, which theoretically do not have inflation at all.

So the best thesis on which to operate is that everybody—the "public" in the largest sense-is to blame for the world's economic crisis, and that everybody should at least make a major effort to cope with it. National self-interest is the largest obstacle. but it is becoming more and more clear that international self-interest is national selfinterest; that oil profits, or bauxite royalties, or the profitable sale of manufactured goods can be tragic illusions. To accept this will be hard: it may even prove impossible on any effective scale. But in that case, everybody will suffer.

Summits and Human Rights

Unless Mr. Nixon and Mr. Brezhnev address "the problems of humanity and the basic rights of man." Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov said in a letter to the two leaders on the eve of the summit, their meeting will be "condemned to failure." But, one gathers, aside from some practical talk about emigration as it relates to trade, there is no evidence-certainly not in the communiquéthat this appeal was heeded. Mr. Sakharov himself spent the summit week conducting a hunger strike to dramatize the plight of Soviet political prisoners.

Three summits have only sharpened, not resolved, the broad issue he raised. It proceeds from the outrage which all decent people must feel at the continuing Soviet record on human rights. Earlier, Western liberals had hoped that contact with the West and the onset of détente would liberalize or "mellow" Soviet society, but Kremlin authorities responded instead by tightening controls. Others felt that the very process of industrialization would make Soviet ways and values "converge" with Western ones, but this prospect has been blocked by Russian tradition and Kremlin ideology alike. Soviet propagandists and well-meaning Americans cultivate the view that underneath, as people, we're all the same. In fact, underneath we're different in fundamental values: We have one view of the relationship betwen the individual and the state and the Russians have another. This is nothing to get excited or defiant about, but it cannot be ignored.

Two political strategies have arisen for relating this fact to detente. By the first, these differences in values are accepted, and diplomacy moves on to make the best government-to-government agreements possible, with the hope that a kind of political suction will carry some human rights causes along. This is the administration's strategy. Mr. Nixon and Dr. Kissinger have been extremely sensitive to Soviet threats to break off other diplomatic avenues if the United States expressed more than perfunctory concern for Soviet intellectuals, dissenters, Jews, constituent nationalities, and so on.

Sen. Henry Jackson's contrary strategy holds that internal Soviet liberalization is not just a welcome by-product but an essential precondition of any real and enduring détente. Until the Kremlin is tamed by the political need to consider the wishes of the Soviet people, he feels, it will be free to act in arbitrary and hostile ways in foreign affairs. Mr. Jackson believes that the Soviet government, desperate for trade, is more vulnerable to American pressure on human rights than the administration has perceived.

The terms of this debate do not allow any single categorical resolution. But enough experience has been gathered under détente to support certain judgments.

First, a détente policy will not win the strong popular support it needs to be effective in other areas if it does not evince a serious concern for Soviet human rights. Not only do Soviet writers, dissenters, Jews. Ukrainians, and others have their American constituencies, but as a people Americans have shown that they demand that American values be reflected in American foreign policy. This is all the more so now that it is becoming generally clear that detente in its other aspects, such as arms control, is sticky and slow.

Second, different Soviet human rights issues cut different ways. The Kremlin's principal thrust is to maintain its control at home. Thus it is particularly open to pressures whose aim or result is to get certain people-Jews, writers out of the country. But pressures meant to soften the situation within Soviet society touch domestic politics more directly and encounter tougher going. This produces an unhappy paradox: Foreign pressures, if they succeed, may leave the Soviet Union a more illiberal place because they draw out of the country many individuals who might be pushing to liberalize it if they remained.

Third, it is not possible, or necessary, to avoid argument over how to press Moscow on human rights. That Mr. Jackson knew better than Dr. Kissinger over the last three years that the Kremlin would "give" on emigration to get trade, does not prove there is no effective limit on how hard the West can push. Indeed, the emigration-trade link may dissolve if Congress decides that on economic grounds alone, trade with the Soviet Union should not keep receiving Ex-Im Bank subsidies. Pressures might then switch to political issues, such as relations in Europe. If the Russians want a full-dress European summit, for instance, why should they not first accept Western proposais on the exchange of information and people? Pressures should not be applied, however, unless the United States is prepared to have its bluff called. Each case must be thought out. Stalemates and reverses can't be excluded. They will produce, in the West, feelings of anger and guilt.

Finally, there is no justification to walk on tiptoe and to avoid speaking plainly and unprovocatively on appropriate occasions about human rights out of fear that Russian sensitivities and politics will be upset. The Russians are tougher than that. There is no need to be abusive but no need to paint pictures either. Russians routinely spout false and vicious stuff about Americans. The least Americans can do is offer the truth. Soviet officials often contend that they do not demand internal American changes as the condition of political agreements. But that is not out of delicacy; it is out of an absolute indifference to human rights on the part of the Soviet political establishment. Nothing illustrates more sharply and sadly this basic obstacle to an authentic Soviet-Amer-

WASHINGTON. - When President Nixon chose Warren E. Burger to be Chief Justice of the United States, on May 21, 1968, he announced the choice at a televised White House ceremony. The nomination was the most important a president could make, he said. He explained in these

Respect for law in a nation is the most priceless asset a free people can have, and the chief justice and his associates are the ultimate custodians and guardians of that priceless asset.

Neither the President nor anyone else could have dreamt then that the justices of the Supreme Court would one day sit in judgment on a case that could determine the fate of his presidency. But that one sentence of his, explaining the importance of the court, well and strangely captures in its two clauses what the case of United States v. Nixon is about.

Respect for law has all along been the issue, the connecting theme, in the series of events called Watergate. More particularly, the issue has been the duty of those who enforce the law to obey it themselves—the duty especially of the President, sworn as he is to execute the nation's laws faithfully.

Duty to Last

The public has understood that theme and followed it through all the evasions and distractions: The efforts of the President: lawyers to weave between the criminal process and impeachment, the dawdling and faintheartedness of Congress. Most Americans have recognized the danger to freedom in official defiance of the law.

The case now before the Supreme Court sounds the theme of duty to law, but it naturally cannot be resolved in terms of a generality. It bristles with specific issues, among them the role of the court itself. And here we come to the second part of Nixon's prescient 1969 sentence.

There are those who object philosophically to the idea of Supreme Court justices as "ultimate custodians" of anything Prof. Philip B. Kurland of the University of Chicago Law School has recently denounced dogma of the cult of the robe" -the belief that the judiciary should be "the ultimate forum for resolution of every major political economic or social oues-tion. It is fair enough criticism that Americans, including judges, have often taken too grandiose a view of the judicial function. But the argument is stretched beyond history and common sense when to attack the Supreme Court's role in the case of the President's tapes. In so using it Prof. Kurland has strayed from the teachings of his mentor. Justice Frankfurter. Frankfurter, and before him Holmes and Brandels, thought the court most grievously abused its power in the first third of this century when it substituted its judgment for that of legislatures on social and economic matters -striking down a law against child labor, for example. They might have felt the same way in the recent abortion cases, for there again the justices dealt with an issue outside their own

The demand for White House tapes for use the states and the federal governby prosecution and defense at a ment or two branches of the criminal trial raises, initially, questions of evidence and privilatter.

The case does involve politics, in the grand sense of the word. There is no denying that, or the subtlety of some of its problems. But more deeply the case con-cerns law—the high place of law in our society.

Justice Robert H. Jackson, himself a skeptic about judicial power, wrote that, whatever the Supreme Court's defects, Americans persisted in regarding it as "the most detached, dispassionate and trustworthy custodian that our system affords for the translation of abstract into concrete constitutional commands." The public is right to look to the Supreme Court still as the ultimate custodian of the priceless asset,

I suspect the country is enjoying the spectacle and would not take kindly to him who would ring down the curtain on it.9

LONDON.-I do not think that there can have been a summer in living memory certainly there has not in mine—when the talk of domestic politics has abated so little. Here we are in the dog days, and every morning's papers, and every evening's televi-sion news bulletins, are full of speculation about possible election dates, talk of some kind of coalition after an election or even before, and analysis of the growing economic crisis. Termis and cricket are pushed to the outer rim of interest; Northern Ireland bleeds on, virtually unnoticed; and no intrepid reporter has had the heart to try frying an egg on the pavement, though in this case the explanation is at least partly that the temperature has been so low, and the rain so torrential, that he would have risked pneumonic if he had.

Perhaps it is not surprising: the parliamentary situation, with a minority government facing two increasingly hostile opposition parties in the House of Com-mons, is also without modern precedent. Amid the maneuvaring for position, consequent on the general belief that an autumn election is the most likely of all the options open to Mr. Wilson, one important aspect of the situstion has not had the attention it deserves. It would be seriously argued that the House of Commons is at present operating as in the best constitutional theory it should, for the very first time in modern political history.

The Purpose

Boichenko suggests that the purpose of Intourist's three mil-lion ruble ($4 billion) travel promotion is not so much the return of foreign currency; money spent by travelers in the Soviet Union mounts to less than 1.5 per cent of the USSR's foreign income he says. The basic purpose is to show the visitors what the Soviet Union is really like.

Because most Americans expect tourist facilities like those dreary cellular institutions known as motor inns, Intourist is building suitable antiseptic places to stay; some of the old hotels, like the National in Moscow and the Oneanta in Yalta, have great charm and warmth, but they are the wave of the past. If it does, if the government is defeated in the House of Commons on any substantial matter, an elec-tion almost inevitably follows. and yet here we have a govern-ment being defeated about twice a week (and it would be more often still if measures heading for certain defeat were not dis-creetly withdrawn before the vote), and the country is not in flames, nor are the heavens raining thunderboits upon us for our political immety.

Take a most significant episode from the end of last week. One of the measures the government was committed to on its election was the repeal of the Industrial Relations Act, and one of the provisions of that act had the effect of withholding certain sub-stantial tax concessions, available to trades unions in general, from any union which refused (as they were entitled to) to register under the act. The overwhelming majority of the unions, including all the largest ones, refused to register, and the consequence was that they were unable to take advantage of the concession, and thus paid more taxes than they would otherwise have been oblig-ed to. The total was about £10 million, and the present government announced that, in its repeal hill, it would provide for the repayment to the unions of this money. Now this smacked too much of retrospective legislation for the taste of both the Conservative and Liberal parties; when the hill was in its committee stage, they combined to outvote the government forces. Not to be outdone, the government announced that it would move to re-instate the controversial clause when the whole House came to vote on it after it emerged from committee. Whereupon their blood up, Conservatives and Liberals they would vote it down again. The government yielded to the mevitable, and announced that they were - abandoning retrospective element in the bill.

Wide of Mark

Now this is only one example of what has been happening, and it suggests that a lot of the criticism of Mr. Reath and his men-criticism which has insisted that their tactics in op-position have been feeble and illconsidered is wide of the mark. For note that the Conservatives and Liberals have not combined to throw out the government's bill revealing the Industrial Relations Act, though they almost certainly could have done so if they had set their minds to it; what they have done is to remove only one or two features that they considered particularly obicctionable. And is this not precisely what the House of Commons in general and the opposition in particular, is supposed at its best to do? To allow, that is, government legislation through, but only after careful examination and suitable alterations and improvements:

I suspect that the country is rather enjoying the spectacle, and would not take kindly to any trigger happy stage manager who decided to ring down the curtain on it. And that is why I also suspect that the heated talk by the government, to the effect that the opposition is behaving "irresponsibly," and making the government's task "impossible" is by no means as closely in pine with the public mood as the government may think. It could, on the contrary, be plausibly argued that the opposition is behaving more responsibly than any opposition bemaking the government's work impossible it is making it a good deal more acceptable. So if, politically speaking, it is going to be a long, hot summer, it is also going to be an interesting

U.S. Aides Warn of New Austerity Program

By Paul Delaney WASHINGTON, July 8 (NYT). -President Nixon's two top economic advisers issued warnings vesterday that the administration might have to take drastic steps to combat inflation. Kenneth Rush, the President's economic counselor, said in a macazine interview that "we may very well need again" some kind of voluntary machinery involving business, labor and the federa. government aimed at restraining excessive wage increases

In a television interview, Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said that Americans would have to adhere to much more discipline over the next few years in the fight against inflation. He said that while the administration has no plans at the moment for a tax increase, an increase would be considered if government spending were not

Mr. Rush said that since the end of wage and price controls on April 30 "we've had some cases of seriously inflationary wage increases negotiated by labor and management," and he added: "It such escalation continues. 1t would be a very serious matter. Mr. Rush, who made his comments in an interview with U.S. News and World Report, was not specific on the kind of machinery that might be established. However, such efforts in the past have had little success He stressed that the administration was not seeking a return to compulsory wage or price controls. But, he said, "we're working out a plan of consultation and discussion with labor and

He said, "I think in terms of years, not months, that is, three, four years. And, more or less indefinitely, we have to follow a policy of much greater discipline than we have followed in the recent past." he added.

Regarding high interest rates Mr. Stein said combatting inflamonetary expansion would hold them down.

Investor Return To Wall St. Seen In U.S. Tax Help

NEW YORK, July 8 (NYT) .-Stock brokers always argue that Congress has only to cut taxes to bring investors back to Wall Street, and now Merrill Lynch & Co. has released a study that, it says, proves as much. The study was compiled from a survey prepared for Merrilli, parent of the country's biggest brokerage house, by the market research firm of Directions for Decisions Inc. The researchers interrogated 610 Merrill Lynch customers across the country without disclosing the identity of the survey's sponsor. The study found that 72 per cent of all investors, including those that have pulled out of the market entirely, would resume trading if Congress allowed them the same capital gains advantages they get when they sell one house to buy another. At present, a taxpayer is exempted from paying a capital gains tax when he sells his home if he buys another costing at least as much within a year.

The study concludes, too, that if investors could deduct from their income $4,000 of their securities losses a year, rather than the $1,000 currently allowed, 66 per cent would step up their activity in the stock market. And 43 per cent would do so if they could exempt the first $1,000 of capital gains from their

"But I think the basic point is that as the inflation rate comes down, as we think it will, and as people become more confident that the inflation rate is not going to speed up again, we will that is the only way we're going to get interest rates down." Regarding a tax increase. Mr. Stein said that it would depend on government spending.

"But I think it was pointed out the other day that if the expenditure side is not kept under control, we will have to consider

Are diamonds really the most secure investment? No doubt about it-providing, of course, that they conform to certain basic criteria: - The stones delivered must have a minimum caliber of one carat. - A formal certificate must cover the following key points:

Weight

Exact dimensions

Quality of the cutting.

Color

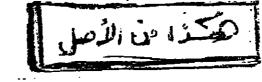

Purity

— An efficient service allows an investor to realize, with a minimum delay, the current value of his diamond or diamonds.

All this is possible with

A Team looks backon 73:

In good condition after a year of balanced development

Again in 1973, the guiding aim of our team-to secure the position of the Bank by providing a complete range of services for our customers—proved its value. We regard the range and variety of our business not only as a necessary basis for our growth but also, if the occasion arises, as the means of balancing out the effects of exceptional developments in particular markets. Since the number of our customers is such that we have an effective overall view of our business, we are able to respond very flexibly to short-term market developments.

At the same time, the principles of our long-term policy remain unchanged:

- Deliberate expansion of our range l. of services on sound marketing principles.
- Effective employment of our Le resources for improving the economic and social structure of Rhineland Palatinate and its towns and villages.
- Extensive co-operation with industry J. in our credit business in providing investment and services.
- Maintaining our close "family" relationship with the savings banks as a constant source of new forms of beneficial co-operation.
- An openness to world markets so 3. that the closer economic co-operation which is developing can be helped across frontiers and advantage taken of the opportunities of the wider market.

Success was not easy in 1973. In the money and capital markets we were working in conditions of widespread unrest which created exceptional problems. Nevertheless, the balance sheet total of the Bank increased from DM 9,300 million to DM 11,300 million, i.e. by 21.7%. As a result, we maintained our market position in all areas.

The interest margin, as expected, was lower than in 1972. To some extent, this was balanced by an improvement in . commission income and services business.

From the profit obtained we were able to make an appropriate allocation o the unpublished reserves, increase the eserves by DM 2 million and pay out

DM 9.1 million in dividends to our shareholders.

The most significant area of our business, in accordance with the traditional emphasis, was in the longterm sector. Long-term lending was again increased substantially, rising by 27% to DM 5,200 million. Within this total, the share of communal loans increased more than proportionately. At the end of 1973, 43% of our long-term loans was for financing communal investment. In the previous year the figure was 38%.

Because of the situation in the building market, the mortgage business of the Bank was somewhat restrained. Particular care was taken in selecting properties for mortgage lending.

As the central giro bank for the Rhineland-Palatinate savings banks, a priority (but not always easy) task for us was the provision of liquidity. This association in fact showed its full value in the extreme situations of the past year.

The liquid assets of the Bank were considerably increased (by DM 647 million).

By a further increase in our investments, we were able in particular to place the international business of the Bank on a broader basis.

The new Rhineland-Palatinate state building society was formed in the second half of 1973 and officially started business on 31st December 1973. Principally as a result of this, our staff increased from 1,286 to 1,426.

As a slate bank and central giro bank we are a publicly controlled institution. We are jointly owned by the Rhineland-Palatinate Government and by the Rhineland-Palatinate savings banks each with a 50° n holding. These both provide an unlimited guarantee of our liabilities with their entire assets. To illustrate the extent of this guarantee, the balance sheet total of the Rhineland-Palatinate savings banks in 1973 was DM 14,305 million and the Rhineland-Palatinate state budget in 1973 amounted to DM 6,586 million.

You can find out more about us from our Report for 1973 which we will send you with pleasure.

2 reasons why the price of SILVER may rise steeply

Two powerful forces are at work today which make a steep rise in the price of silver seem inevitable.

First, silver, like many other natural resources, is in short sepply. The demand for silver surpassed new production for each of the last 23 years. And for each of the last 13 years, the demand for silver surpassed new production by more than 100

This excess of demand over supply is exerting a strong, steady upward pressure on the price of silver. During the 1960s the price of silver rose 95%. So far in the 70s, the rise has been

Second, we're in an era of workiwide inflation. People throughout the world are losing confidence in the ability of governments to check inflation. And when that happens, they seek the security of precious metals such as silver, rather than paper

Indeed, for nearly 2,600 years, since the first silver coinage, knowledgeable investors have turned to silver for financial protection—because silver generally performs well in bad times.

For example, during Chile's recent decade of inflation, the price of silver increased more than 1,500 times. During Germany's nightmarish runaway inflation following World War I, the price of silver increased more than 91 billion times. And during the 33 years of our current infistion, the price of silver has increased more than 10-fold.

Harry Browne, who correctly predicted the first dol-ler devaluation in 37 years, now writes in his new book. You Can Profit from a Monetary Crisis, "Silver offers a way to hedge against a depreciating dollar, to be on the right side of a shortage for a change, to be relatively invaluerable to the next depression, and to preserve a long-term store of value through a runaway inflation."

Now, our new booklet shows you the why's and how's of silver investing. In The Case for Silver by Louis E. Carabini, President of the Pacific Coast Coin Exchange, you'll discover: · Why worldwide silver consumption is in a powerful long-term sity and depth of feeling. It is covers a specific period) but a series of notes apparently desultory, about the impact of man, nature and historic time upon a profoundly sensitive and educated writer, the greatest modern Greek poet. It would not be unfair to compare this work in its delicacy, passion and astitieness with that of the Valery we meet with in the "Notebooks." Both the Frenchman and the Greek were determined to write postry of deep but controlled feeling and metaphysical subtlety. The Nobel Prize was a most appropriate prize to salute the work of George Seleris (who, died in 1971), for with him Greek literature crossed the great divide into Europe and laid its firm claim upon the European consciousness, becoming a part of it. This is not to decry the great Greek poets of the last 50 years-far from it. But their sensibility remains Greek in the Balkan sense, and their work while brilliant is metropolitan Greek in spirit. They were not, as Seferis was, essentially cosmopolitan souls (Cavafy is the one exception), and one wonders whether Seferis's Smyrniot connections did not give him the same angle of vision as Alexandria's did for Cavaiy. That, and the roving life of a diplomat. He always grew ironic over himself as a wanderer, and the per-sons or double he chose for him-self (just as his admired friend Eliot chose "Prufrock," Just as Pound chose "Manberly") was "Stratis Thalassinos," an ironic seamen-traveler. He looked upon the impermanence and folly of life with the detached eye of a man who knows that he is leaving it, that his ship will be sailing in a few hours. He did not worry much about death it was a voyage like any other; he was living in the midst of it. But he felt how provisional life was, and how absurd.

WHEW! I NEVER SEEN SO MANY PICTURES OF ONE KID IN MY WHOLE LIFE!"

A POET'S IOURNAL Days of 1945-1951 By George Seferis.

His temperamental relationship with T. S. Eliot will not. elude anyone who knew them both, for they had much in common. They were both great critins, and they both worked coolly and quietly like great surgeons ("hastening slowly"). Roth were mystics and savanta. When Eliot speaks of "getting every ounce of tradition behind each word" one thinks of Seferis, so deeply steeped in the ancient Greek tragedies. and yet so modern in his approach. As a young consul in London, Seferis announced to a friend in Athens: "There is a chap here who must have read my poems, at any rate he is infinenced by them. He is called T.S. Eliot." At any rate he used to tell this anecdote southst himself. Later

THE fascination of this sort of he explained to me why he had postic journal is in its den- been right in one sense. Both y and depth of feeling. It is posts felt that their point of not a record of events (though it departure had been the French symbolists, and particularly Laforgue and Ranband; the later theoretical work of the surreclists meant less to them. They were both clearnesided enough to recog-nize that that movement, how-ever finitial, would end in perities Seferis was hicky in his transfertors both English and French. To have Jacques Le Carrière and Yves Bonnefoy to introduce one in Paris, and Rez Warner in London-this was a great help flots to him and to us his readers.

Another faculty the two great poets shared was the ability to let drop observations about life and poetry which tumbled into the mind like pebbles down an empty well and echoed on for years. Seferis once said that, in a sense, poetry was the complete life of the poet, the inner life, and that the mere biography was a shadow play. He added that if he were stopped after his death at the Heavenly Gates by Peter and asked to justify time spent on earth he could only point to his poetry in order to plead that he had not wasted his life in un-living!

Shortly before the news of the Nobel Prize came through in 1963, I visited Seleris in Athens to renew-a friendship which had started to fall into disrepair owing to too long separations. He was already ill but as always resigned and brave-hearted. He said something about having to economise a bit because he was retired now and even an ambassador's pension was relatively modest. However he knew that in Greece there would always he some corner of an bland with a few black olives and a can of velsing. I tried to cheer him by saying: "Don't worry; one of these fine years Greece will be given the Nobel and there is only you. You will get it on the grounds of your whole work of its statute. He ground and said: "Don't wish me that, my dear Larry. I feel that I am going on more and more towards anonymity!" A little while after that came the great prize.

He also said to me once: "We Greek poets have one problem more than you or the French. We have a language almost as broken up into shards as the remains of Troy. Half our vocabulary goes back to Homer, half to Byzance, and as the peasant language is the purest and has guarded in-tact so many of the ancient Greek words, using them so naturally, we must by and make the demotic our foundation in the teeth of the professors and the journalists." He went on with a smile: "But she is such a firebrand this damned tongue of ours." He used the lovely word "Pismatara!"

All honor to this great poet and the old-new Greek tradition he has helped to shape. This fine document justifies all we writers have thought about Seferis for years.

South was alive to this delicate point. He opened one clab, the strong bid of the Precision System, and received a positive response of two diamonds. Now there were good prospects of a heart slam but the spade position was the key factor. If North held an ace-queen combination or a guarded king without the queen there would be a clear advantage in having East on lead.

South therefore tried a stries of conventional bids simed at persuading North to bid hearts. Three diamonds asked about the quality of North's diamonds, and with a worthless suit he would have bid three hearts. Unfortanately, he bid three spades, showing a five-card sait headed by

MUNICH, July 8 (IHT).second half. When Van Hanegem There is nothing like quitting white you're ahead. Having scored the winning World Cup goal against the Netherlands, 29 year-old. Gerd Mueller, West Germany's center-forward, promptly came up and put a far from heavy hand on his shoulder. Mueller promptly fell to the ground as though he had been chopped down. The referee, Jack Taylor of England, ran to conannounced that he was going to sult his linesman: The linesman. retire. It did not prevent him, in my opinion, from being the outstanding Dutch whispering that his real ambition player on the field. is to play for a king's ransom It is ironic that for the second in Spain, where he could now probably earn as much as Johan Cruyff does with Barcalona It was a pity that Mueller should hiemish his decisive per-formance with a sly piece of theater, which got the brilliant time in their history, the West Germans have won the World Cup after losing a match. In 1954, when they were victorious in Switzerland, they casually threw away an early match against Hungary, 8-3. That was the afternoon when the brilliant Hungarian captain, Ferenc Puskas, was kicked by the German stopper, Werner Liebrich, and dropped out of the tournament until the final in which he was not really fit to play.

- Thanks to Loss

This year, as we know, the West Germans lost to the East Germans, 1-0, in Hamburg, with ultimately beneficial results. Indeed, Helmut Schoen was saying yesterday after the final victory here that he was thinking of sending a telegram of thanks to Juergen Sparwasser, the scorer of the East German goal.

To my mind, however, that defeat takes some of the gloss off the West German perfor-mance. It is odd to think that the only team in the tournament not to lose a match was Scotland, which did not even reach the second round. But when you implement a pattern as complicated as FIFA did this time, then you must be prepared for anomalies.

The West German European Nations Cup winning team of 1972 was to my mind unquestionably a great one, a considerably better team than that of 1974. Above all, it had a Gunter Netzer in stupendous form, which gave it a far more effective and original midfield: Wolfgang Overath, who was just about the happiest man in Munich at the celebration banquet, has had a good World Cup, but it cannot be pretended that he has Netzer's genius. Or.

let one say, the genius of Netzer

Franz Beckenbauer, too, seemed to me a much better, more versatile and exciting player in 1972. Perhaps it was the strain of knowing that he must be playing in his last World Cup, not to mention his second World Cup final, which caused him to play a somewhat subdued game in the final. There are those who mainthe final in those first 25 minutes, when they had such apparent superiority and were in total control of the West German These critics believe that the Dutch made the expensive and finally disastrous error of playing "possession" football, instead of going for goals. I am not wholly in agreement, and find it interesting that Johan Neeskens, the brilliant Dutch midfield man and scorer of their goal, should have remarked after the final that they kept expecting the Germans to attack them, and could not quite believe it wasn't happening.

No Help for Cruyff Certainly the West Germans tended to suffer from what one might call a "Cruyff complex," but equally the Netherlands were more preoccupied by the opposition than we were inclined to believe. My own feeling is that those other critics, who have been saying throughout that the Dutch lacked scoring power to exploit the superb play making of Cruyif, may have been closer to the truth. Johnny Rep, who threw away perhaps the best and surely the most significant chance of the game, simply hadn't the sheer class demanded in a World Cup, and demanded by the subtle suggestions of a player such as

For Schoen, the West German coach, it is a sublimely happy moment. At long last he has done what he has so long dreamed of doing; won a World Cup. And in so doing, perhaps exorcised the substantial ghost of his mentor and predecessor, Sepp Herberger, the resourceful little man who won the World Cup in 1954. In doing so, Schoen has used methods and players foreign to Herberger, whose teams played in the old German tradition of strength and speed. Schoen's have those qualities, too, but they also possess an artistry, a deliveration, an originality which Herberger's did not. And I refuse to believe that Schoen, after his eleven years in office. does not take much of the ultimate credit for this.

Fans Give Dutch A Hero's Welcome

AMSTERDAM, July 8 (UPI).-Thousands of fans today gave the Dutch soccer team a hero's welcome when it returned home from the World Cup final in Munich which it lost to West Germany, 2-1.

At Schiphol Airport, a crowd of 10,000 cheered and waved when the team arrived in a chartered plane. A government official draped garlands of flowers, with ribbons in the national colors. around the shoulders of coach Phone Michels and his players.

Marshall Plan Works for Dodgers

MONTREAL, July 8 (AP),— Strongman Mike Marshall saved both games yesterday as the Los Angeles Dodgers swept a doubleheader from the Montreal Expos, 4-1 and 5-3.

Marshall, making his 57th appearance in 85 games this season, came into a none out, basesloaded situation in the seventh inning of the second game and allowed one run. He also gave up a two-run homer to Willie Davis in the ninth while recording his 13th save

Marshall came on in the eighth inning of the opener to wrap up Tommy John's 13th victory.

In the second game, the Dodgers took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on run-scoring hits by Bill Buckner and Ron Cey. Cey's single drove in a Dodger run in the third and Los Angeles made it 4-0, on Dave Lopes's RBI bouncer in the sixth.

In the opener, the Dodgers grabbed a 2-1 lead in the fourth on a run-scoring double by Willie Crawford and an RBI single by Joe Ferguson,

The Evert-Connors Match

Love at Wimbledon

By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK, July 8 (NYT).—The tennis mods keep trying to eliminate the word "love" from the game's vocabulary. Some umpires shout the words "nothing" or "zero" to make the score sound more competitive than social. But the mods will have to wait now. By winning the Wimbledon men's and women's singles championships four months before they are to be married, Jimmy Conne s and Chris Evert have restored the word "love" to tennis in all its cliché splendor.

Love match. Love story. Love conquers ail. Surely they will emerge from St. Anthony's Church in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in November under a canopy of crossed tennis racquets. America demands it. Even the anti-"love" mods expect it. After all, this romance was made in heaven, meaning two years ago over a Coke at Wimbledon, which is more important than heaven to most tennis players. The wedding had been discussed for last May but Jimmy's mother shook her head. "Nobody wins Wimbledon on their honeymoon," she declared. And now, as the singles champions, America's sweethearts opened the Wimbledon Ball Saturday night with the first dance. It's a story-book script for a movie in the 1940s with Van Johnson and June Allyson, except that nobody would have believed

On the ring funger of her left hand, Chris wears an engagement ring with a 21-carat diamond that she and Jimmy selected in South Africa instead of in Tiffany's window. They were there last winter for the South African Open tournament. Together they saw the diamond gouged from the ground, cut and shaped. His engagement present there was a ring-and-bracelet set of gold and entwined black

On Parade

For three years Chris Evert has been a Miss America in a tennis dress. And she has lived the part on parade in her blond ponytail and gold earrings, all prim and proper. When she turned pro at the age of 18, she chose to spurn a business alliance with Mark Mc-Cormack, Eugene Scott or Donald Dell, three impresances who coveted her commercial future. On the advice of her father, a tennis pro who shaped her game, she signed only two business contracts.

"We took the dress deal because Chrissie really wanted that one." her father said at the time. "And we took the racquet contract because she had to play with a racquet anyway." That way she had time to be 18 years old-time to play tennis, time to relax and time to phone Jimmy Connors when he wasn't phoning her. As tennis travelers on separate tours, they often were apart during their romance. Their telephone bills surpassed $10.000 several months ago. And when they were at the same tournaments, Chris's mother usually was there, too. They appear to understand,

"It makes us behave," Jimmy has said. Chris also realizes the image she projects. "I can't fool around," she has been quoted. "I know that Chris Evert isn't supposed to do certain things. I'll live my life the way I want, but I have no intentions of getting caught smoking marijuana or getting pregnant so they can really jump on it." On and off the court, 21-year-old Jimmy Connors annoys almost everybody but his fiancee. They are the tennis proof that, in marriage, opposites attract. Other players have called him "a cocky punk" and a "child." He has been castigated for spurning the United States Davis Cup team. He has spurned the World Championship Tennis circuit of the leading pros, preferring to dominate the weaker United States Lawn Tennis Association tour. During a match he has been known to mutter obscenities at the spectators. As a summa cum loudest graduate of the Bie Nastase School of Tennis Etiquette, his court manners are often as poor as Chris's are

"Nasty taught me all that stuff," Jimmy has said. "Like how to act like a fool on the court.

Rosewall's Frustration

He has learned well. Jimmy and Chris earned $312,000 in prize money last year. They might approach $500,000 this year. Their nest egg is somewhat more substantial than that of the average engaged American couple. But love didn't really conquer all at Wimbledon because Connors's victory only extended the frustration for Ken Rosewall, the tiny 39-year-old Australian who has now lost the Wimbledon final four times 20 years apart. For 12 of those years, as an outcast from Wimbledon, he competed in the obscurity of the pro tennis tour that existed before open tournaments were approved. One night during that time his name was on the Eighth Avenue marquee at the old Madison Square Garden in New York but in the gloom of the employees' entrance the watchman stopped the small black-haired man.

"Hold it," the watchman ordered. "You can't come in here until I know who you are,"

"Rosewall," the small man replied, "Ken Rosewall, I'm the tennis players." "All right," the watchman said. "But you're awful small to be a tennis player."

At the time, Rosewall not only was a tennis player, he also was considered to be the world's best. The shame is that now he might be remembered mainly as the best player never to have won the Wimbledon singles title. But after his loss to Connors Saturday, much of the applause was for a Ken Rosewall who may never get to the final again. That's love, too.

Oliver Takes 2d Can-Am Race

July 8 (UPI).—England's Jackie Oliver, leading from start to finish, beat UOP-Shadow teammate George Follmer by 30 seconds yesterday won his second straight race of the Canadian-American Challenge Cup series. Oliver, winner three weeks ago at Bowmanville, Ontario, moved mer finished second in Ontario. Oliver and Follmer yesterday had a fight race in their black Shadows for the first 34 laps of the 44-lap race at the 2.52-mile course. But Follmer, who had been right behind Oliver for nearly 85 miles, was unable to maintain that pace over the final 10 points ahead of Follmer in the 10 laps and fell farther behind.

The Football Strike

MASHINGTON.—As if the United States did not have enough trouble, the National Football League players have gone out on strike and there is a possibility that none of the veterans will be there for the kickoff in the Although the disputed issues have to do with wages, discipline and the power of the footballcommassioner, the main problem is Buchwald extomation.

A professional football player. Bronco Beaulandovich, told me, The owners are trying to cut down the number of men on the field They maintain you don't need 11 men on a side to play a game. They claim they have computers that can kick, pass and block in one-tenth the time it takes a man to do it. But what they don't say is that if you cut down the number of men on a team you run great safety risks, A computer can't protect a quar-terback like a human being.

"The football owners are trying to save money on the payroll at the expense of our jobs. We're not coing to stand for it. The rules say you have to have 11 men on a side, and we're going to stick by

Horace Maldabeth, a football thub owner who has been negothating the contract, told me, There has been too much teatherbedding on football teams, and it is no longer economically feasible to maintain all those players on the field. We've done studies to show that the guards ean be easily replaced by machines. The ends do nothing but

N.Y. Museum Founder Gets German Prize

COLOGNE, July 8 (UPI).-The European Art Dealers Association has awarded its 10.000 deutschemark prize this year to Alfred Barr, founder of the Museum of Modern Art in New York

The prize will be presented to him in Cologne on Oct. 20, during the annual international art market held here.

stand around all day, and the Football Union refuses to let tackles touch the ball Unless we use new technical methods and undate the job rules, we can't stay in business"

Maldabeth showed me a computer that was programed to do almost everything a player could, We can put one of these at each goal line and play a full hour's game in 10 minutes. These computers can produce twice as many touchdowns, fumbles and intercepted passes as any team in the league. Why should we keep men on the payroll when they add nothing to the game?"

"But don't computers take some fun out of the game?" I

"Possibly But our concern is profits How can we explain to our stockholders that we are paying II players when five could do the job?

Maldabeth continued, "Don't forget, we're not talking only about the 11 men on the field. There are also 29 on the bench doing absolutely nothing. No football team can afford to have 20 players sitting on their duffs hiding their heads under blan-

"Aren't the players worried about job security?"

We're willing to work that out. We will guarantee the union that no active player will be fired from his tob because of automation But if he gets injured or plays out his contract, then he cannot be replaced by another man, I can't think of anything fairer.

Makdabeth said that he wasn't thinking just of the players but the fans as well, "Pootball costs are skyrocketing, and if they contimue we may have to climinate a quarter of the game. By automating, we are guaranteeing the best possible contest at the best possible price. If we can give the fans a good game with five men on each team, I think we will have made a great contribution to

I went back to Bronco Bestlandovich, the players' representative, and told him what Maldabeth had said. "That's a bunch of pigskin," he said, "Computers or no computers, I ain't going to send no guy out on the field unless he has 10 men to protect him. We've been playing football by hand for 79 years and we ain't about to do the sport.

African Primitive Statuette Fetches $444,000 in London

By Source Mehkian

ONDON, July & (IHT).—At a sensational sale of African CONDON, July 5 (Int.)—As a second a figure of a finite and South Seas art today in London, a figure of a finite and South Seas art today in London, a figure of a finite and Microsia. player from the Benin Kingdom, in what is now Nigeria, rose to $185,000 ($444,000), a price three times higher than the record for any primitive work of art.

The bronze (63 centimeters high) belongs to the middle Benin period (circa 1550-1650) and is considered more precisely datable-to the 1550-1600 period. It was put up for sale by the estate of R. Storgis Ingersoll of Philadelphia-he acquired it in 1953 for an undisclosed price.

The first time the figure showed up at auction was in 1931, selling to a Paris dealer, Charles Ratton, for £220/10 shillines. The auctioneers, an English firm no longer in business, then referred to it as "the property of a gentleman who was a member of the Benin expedition." Mr. Ratton, regarded the world over as the greatest authority on the subject outside the academic world, later resold the statuette to Louis Carré, the well-known dealer in modern paintings, for 40,000 francs.

It was Mr. Ratton who helped to launch a market for Benin art by organizing a large exhibition at the Musée de l'Homme in the 1930s-until then collectors of African art tended to look down on it, saying it reflected European influence rather than a genuine African aesthelic. Mr. Ratton accounts for today's record price by pointing out that most of the great works have been bought by major museums or foundations and only occasionally does one turn up on the market.

This end-of-an-era feeting was reflected in other high prices: £28,000 for a Benin head (circa 1830-1840) of a ruler; III,000 for a head of a similar type but of inferior work-
